Successful Concert.

The Didsbury School Orchestra made their first appearance at a concert given by the C.G.I.T. Girls at Knox United Church on Tuesday evening.

This orchestra of boys and girls who played a number of selections in a very creditable manner, has only been organized a few months and much credit is due to Mr. C. R. Ford the director, who started with raw material and by his coaching has brought them to such a state of proficiency.

The program was opened by the C.G.I.T. Girls with an outline of the work and objects of the group given by Miss Mathilde Schveisinger and reports were read by the different officers.

After a group of selections by the Orchestra, Miss Lois Edwards, who has a pleasing voice, sang "The Old Spinning Wheel" in a delightful manner, and Miss Betty Boorman gave a pianoforte selection which was well received.

The play "Sowing the Seed" was given by the girls was a delightful little comedy, and Orpha Gabel as the maid and Betty Cummings as the dead old lady, caused lots of amusement.

A campfire scene with the girls singing around the fire, and the closing ceremony with "Taps" brought to a close an evening's entertainment which was very creditable to all who took part.

Didsbury Youth Wins on Appeal from Jail Term.

Instead of having to serve one year in jail, Clyde Henry, Didsbury district youth, was brought from the Leithbridge institution and allowed to go, upon recognizance being provided.

This decision was reached by the Appeal Court of Alberta in the course of one of the shortest sittings on record. The sittings opened at 10:30 a.m. Monday, and before noon all the appeals on the docket had been dealt with.

Henry, who is not yet 20 years old, took a saddle worth $75, the property of John Ayl, Didsbury farmer. He did so, however, believing that Mr. Ayl was about $9 for services rendered in the past. In an affidavit presented to their lordships, Henry said that if he were given his liberty he would endeavor in future to "live the life of an honest, upright Canadian."

The court decided that the case was one in which leniency could be shown, and the sentence of Magistrate G. C. Prattie at Olds was reduced to the length of time which Henry has been in custody, a little less than a month.—Calgary Herald.

Will Confine Roadwork to Graveling.

Second-course graveling on main highways will comprise the government's program this summer in the way of capital expenditures on highways. Hon. O. L. McPherson, minister of public works said there is a large mileage of such roads on which only first spreads of gravel have been made, and since the second spreading comes under the head of capital costs, to complete construction, this will be undertaken on the program of the coming season. No new construction of highways will be done this year, the minister said, and the $200,000 appropriation for capital will be entirely applied to graveling operations.

An Exhibition Of Childhood

London is to witness a most unique exhibition when, on April 19, will open a display of relics of "Childhood throughout the Ages", acclaimed as the most comprehensive portrayal of child life down the centuries ever presented to the public. The event derives significance as much from the historic value of the various exhibits, as from the purpose to which the proceeds are to be devoted. The beneficiary will be one of London's most deserving charities.

The relics to be displayed link child life with the dim remote ages of the past, the oldest exhibit being a Chinese doll said to date from 600 B.C. From that far distance down the years, the varying fancies of children, the toys which brought them pleasure, the garments they wore, the furniture which decked their nurseries and playrooms, all will be traceable in the array of exhibits from the pre-Christian era down to the end of the reign of Queen Victoria.

Queen Elizabeth's christening robe, her cap and mittens, a portrait of her as a baby (by Holbein), will be on show. A shirt worn by Charles I. as a child of two, his boyhood's brocade coat, will find prominent place in the display beside Oliver Cromwell's christening robe. Here then that historic enmity which ended so tragically for the monarch is made to symbolize the transitory nature of human passions and, transformed, serves the charitable purposes of today. Napoleon, too, will be represented, not in a manifestation of childish desire but rather in evidence of that other love which great and lowly have in common, and which is, of course, as old as childhood is. The present given by the Emperor Napoleon to his infant son, the King of Rome, has been obtained as an exhibit.

Perambulators and cradles and such adjuncts of childhood that flourished in the seventeenth century have been collected to augment the display. Children's furniture from the sixteenth to the nineteenth centuries will be shown, as well as a display of British and foreign children's clothes, hats, shoes and gloves of the same period, early games, cards and jigsaw puzzles, playbooks and lesson books. A series of rooms is being arranged to depict child scenes of bygone days with inevitable wax figures in the Madame Tussaud tradition. There will be portrayed in similar fashion a Kate Greenaway scene, a Victorian Sunday, the ancient nanny and the modern nurse.

The British royal family, as usual where charity is the object, is according wholehearted support to the exhibition. Queen Mary is contributing playthings of her own childhood, and toys which entertained the young Prince of Wales, his brothers and sisters. Two gold rattles given by Queen Victoria to the Prince of Wales also have been offered, and considerable interest will attach to an exhibit of the immature efforts of the Prince and his brother, the Duke of York, as artists. It is said these efforts are just as atrocious in result and effect as any of less exalted youth.

Perhaps one of the most interesting of the relics to be exhibited, however, has no connection whatever with the childhood of the great or the near-great. It is a pewter feeding bottle, believed to date back to about 1720. It was discovered in possession of a farmer who was using it to feed his lambs. Probably no more fitting place could be found for this memento of a bygone period and a long-forgotten childhood than alongside the relics of royal youth and palace playrooms. It is a striking reminder of that strange democracy of the very young, that constant symbol of the "great levelers"—childhood and death—and it is to be hoped that as such, in these transitional days, it will be interpreted by those privileged to patronize the exhibition.

There is a timely moral lesson, too, in the story recently told by one of the better known financial journals. It happened that a shabbily dressed, ostensibly poor, elderly woman entered the classic portals of a large up-town bank in New York, and told the uniformed guard she desired to open an account. She was shown to the new account department where three clerks of the bank were busy intent upon the approaching lunch hour than upon new business, particularly business which came in such impromptu, casual garb. As it happened, lunch won, and the woman was left to the manager.

After stating her mission, the old lady asked to see a statement of the bank's financial position, much to the surprise of the manager who was accustomed to having the institution's financial status taken for granted, particularly by small depositors. However, he presented the requested statement, answered curtly some startlingly intelligent and pertinent questions, which satisfactorily received, brought the intimation the lady wished to open an account. She gave her name and other necessary information, and, finally, for he expected a small initial sum, he asked: "How much do you wish to deposit?"

"Thirty-one thousand dollars," replied the old lady, equally exactly, as she proceeded to count out the money in bills of various denominations.

Strange Accidents At Sea

Ships' Officers Give Accounts Of Two Unusual Collisions

Recalling strange accidents at sea, officers of the steamer Beachpark, at Saint John, gave first-hand accounts of two unusual collisions.

Chief Engineer David Thomson was with the Volturna when that ship carried troops across the English Channel in war days. Traveling without lights, troop-carriers proceeded at full speed over courses ordered clear by the admiralty. A stocky traveler returning from the banks had not heard the warning and unwittingly crossed the troopship's track.

"It was the first time an iron ship was cut in two," said Thomson. "We struck the big troop-carrier broadside, plowed right through the hull and out the other side. From the port I got a fleeting glance of the stern half sinking."

Only five of the crew of 39 were rescued, and one died soon after. "The confused survivors wouldn't believe it. They couldn't understand why we had not foundered also."

Capt. Will Masson told how the steamer Montparic, a famous Q-boat during the war, met a strange end while under his command in 1919. A crash occurred while the Montparic was feeling its way through poor visibility one night a few days out from the Tyne mouth. Capt. Masson saw the bow of another ship protruding into his own, heard terse orders in a foreign language, and watched the unknown vessel back away into the mist.

The Montparic sinking, its crew jumped into the sea. Capt. Masson and a few seamen were rescued from a life raft the following evening, but other members of the crew were never found and the ship which left them helpless was never identified.

British Flight Squadron

Suggestion Is Made That A Visit To Canada Should Be Undertaken

A suggestion was made in the British House of Commons that the United Kingdom send to Canada detachments or flights of airplanes to "show the flag" in the Dominion. The planes would be sent aboard a naval aircraft carrier.

Discussion of the proposal arose during the debate on the air estimates when Oliver E. Simmonds, Dundee Conservative and aircraft manufacturer, told the house Canada had never even a squadron of British planes, although every year squadrons of machines from the United States made exhibition flights to Canadian air pageants.

Mr. Simmonds said he had hope expressed that the Royal Air Force would "show the flag" in Canada. He asked that the air ministry consider the matter.

Sir Philip Sassoon, minister for air, described the suggestion as "very interesting."

Progress For Persia

Mechanization Of Old Handicraft Industries Looks Like Mistake

And now the shah of Persia has evolved a five-year plan! Progress is to make its debut through the mechanization of the ancient handicraft industries that have created so many delights for collectors. Great carpet and rug factories will rear their beacons where potent hands have labored after the traditions and the patterns of the centuries.

One will be the features that made orienting collecting a delight to those with incomes permitting it. No longer will variations in color tell of the exhaustion of some native dye mixture, or irregularities in pattern betray the advent of a new native weaver. The innovations that began with aniline dyes and chemical washes will reach their climax in a uniformity that matches the best American "orientals."

Indeed, progress in Persia may mean no progress at all. The innovations that began with aniline dyes and chemical washes will reach their climax in a uniformity that matches the best American "orientals."

Passenger Train Pooling

Expected To Effect Big Saving Under Arrangement

The passenger train pooling arranged for in the Montreal-Toronto, Ottawa-Toronto and Montreal-Quebec services, as extended and effective from March 11, will produce a total saving of approximately 1,000,000 train miles per annum, divided about evenly between the C.N.R. and C.P.R. and on the basis of a conservative estimate will represent a saving to each company of approximately $500,000 per annum. This information was given in the House of Commons by Hon. H. J. Manion, minister of railways and canals, based on a telegram from Chairman C. P. Fullerton, of the C.N.R. board of directors.

Has Plan For Laying Foundation Of New Municipalities In The West On A Village System

Noting the recent proposal of a British settlement company to locate thousands of families on unorganized land in Canada within the next few years, James H. Ramage, farmer at Crestwynd, Sask., outlines a plan for laying the foundation of new municipalities on a village system.

"Under the present arrangement municipal offices, churches, stores, schools and other social conveniences are widely scattered," Mr. Ramage pointed out. "My idea is to have a main street through the centre of every township, extending if necessary or possible throughout the length of the province."

"The advantage is in having such utilities as roads, electric power lines, telephone systems, water works and other public services joined together in the most useful and economical manner," continued Mr. Ramage.

"The main street would do away with the necessity of further expensive railway development, since it would become an all-season transportation artery used by trucks and buses," explained Mr. Ramage. "As the farms are situated near the main street, in most cases, is several miles from a highway of any kind, and seldom is he on a direct route to his shipping point on the railroad. The highway system is so diversified in direction and development is slow. There are too many roads and not enough good ones."

"The farm houses would all face the 'main street,'" it is pointed out. Where about 75 families occupy a settled township there could be 600 or more, Mr. Ramage thinks. Saskatchewan with 3,750 townships might support 3,000 persons per township and have a population of 11,000,000. Alberta, Manitoba and the Peace River district in the Northwest Territories could support correspondingly large populations, said Mr. Ramage.

The 23,000 acres in a township would be divided up as follows: Forestry work, 150 acres; gardens, 120 acres; buildings, 120 acres; shelter belts of trees, 1,050 acres; farming, 21,100 acres. "This distribution would reduce the wheat acreage as suggested by President Bennett and others," said Mr. Ramage.

The Sleights Of Moscow

Soviets Are Putting Colorful Drivers Out Of Business

Soviet Russia's war on private enterprise is driving the colorful Izvoshchiks, or sleigh drivers, out of business. This winter only a few are to be found in Moscow, where once they were the popular transportation guides of gay parties who took midnight rides to dances where gypsies played. The gay parties are gone and the sleigh drivers and their horses are pitiful reminders of the olden days. It is planned to replace them with motorized taxis, but so far there are only 500 cabs for the 3,500,000 residents of Moscow, and those who wish to ride must use the crowded street cars.

The Hog Marketing Outlook

Highly Favorable Canadian Export Prospects

The consumption of pig products in Canada during 1932 reached the highest point in the history of the industry at 917 pounds per capita. This statement appears in the Agriculture Situation bulletin just issued by the department of agriculture at Ottawa, in which the following summary of the hog situation appears:

Briefly summarizing the situation, it would appear that the hog outlook is favorable to the producer. While it is likely that there will be some temporary price declines during the present year, the trend is upward. Market supply prospects are for a moderate volume during the first half of the year, followed by a fairly substantial increase. At market prices such as ruled during the early part of the year, there should be greater interest in the purchasing of feed grains and a falling off in the number of unfinished pigs offered. Prospects for export appear to be satisfactory, and the restrictions existing on exports from foreign countries selling to the British market are working quite favorably toward stabilization of prices. Despite the present favorable export outlook, improvement in breeding, feeding, selection and pack so as to secure a large per centage top grades of bacon is much more desirable than a marked increase in general production.

It is quite safe to forecast a substantial improvement in the quality of the 1934 production, as a result of improvement in type of sow and sire used as foundation stock, and of better feeding practices than in any previous period in the history of the industry in Canada. This is highly favorable to Canadian export prospects.

Collection Has No Equal

Britain Has Specimens Of Every Living Insect On Earth

The building of a permanent home in South Kensington for one of the most precious scientific possessions of the Empire is about to be begun. The vast unclassified Entomological Collection of the Natural History Museum is to be housed, after years of exile in alien quarters, in a building six floors in height and a hundred and forty feet in length, adjoining the western end of the present Museum block. The final plans for at least one half of this block are about to be completed and confirmed, and work on the erection itself may begin in the new year. The collection has no equal abroad. It is an all but complete catalogue and encyclopaedia of every living insect on the earth and the gaps in its completeness are filled in year by year. Its specimens, in their tens of thousands, are standards from which the insect world is named, and scientists who discover new or puzzling insects in any part of the globe are able to compare them with the information. One of the most needed benefits of the Entomological Block (which will never be open to the general public) will be the new ease and convenience with which the experts of the Imperial Institute of Entomology will be able to plan their war against our costliest enemies—locusts, flies, caterpillars, and all the insect plagues which eat up the crops and imperil the prosperity of an Empire which gardens the world.

Menace Of Low Grade Seed

Growers Taught The Value Of Producing Only High Grade Product

Low grade seed is a menace to the reputation of Canada in the export markets and a drag in the domestic market. The marketing of seeds in general is the first due to four years has been attended by serious difficulties and comparatively low prices to growers, but has at least taught the value of producing a high grade product. No 1 seed has almost always sold at a profitable price, while low grade seed has been unsalable or sold at a loss to the grower. It should be the practice of every grower, advises The Agricultural Situation bulletin, to save seed only from clean fields, so that it may be cleaned to grade No. 1.

Demand For Farm Horses

Domestic Wide Interest In The Use Of Horses

The horse breeding industry is looking a sturdy industry. This is particularly true in regard to farm horses, sixteen hundred of which were supplied to the Eastern provinces from the prairies in 1933.

According to the new publication "The Agricultural Situation" just issued by the department of agriculture at Ottawa, greater activity was shown among breeders of purebred draught horses, as the number of registrations of Clydesdales, Percherons and Belgians was almost double that of 1932. With the depletion of grade farm horses a grade breeding sale in the pamphlet to be produced for young purebred stock as foundation breeding animals. With the Dominion-wide interest in the use of horses as a factor in successful agriculture in Canada, there is an increasing activity among farmers and breeders in the production of more and better horses for both farm work and breeding purposes. This situation promises a keener demand and better prices, which is bound to result in a general forward movement in the horse breeding industry.

Up to January 1, this year, 200,000,000 guilders had been spent. On the other hand, it is estimated that the reclamation will give work to 3,000 laborers for ten years, which fact alone, in view of the unemployment situation, the government deems sufficient reason for its continuance.

SOVIET DESIGN

ZORACH'S MODEL

While the accusation of William Zorach, American sculptor, that the design for the Palace of the Soviets, to be constructed at Moscow, is an adaptation of a design he entered in a world-wide competition, goes unheeded, plans are being rushed by Soviet authorities to begin work on the gigantic monument to Nikolai Lenin. The huge building, to face the Red Square, will rise 1,400 feet taller than the Empire State Building in New York. It is in the form of a telescope, each section of which will be surrounded by columns, giving the effect of pyramidal cog wheels. On top of the huge shaft a statue of Lenin will stand in characteristic speaking pose.

A Very Ancient Sport

Skis Matches Were Favorite Sport In Middle Ages

An exhibition of skis in Berlin now shown that skiing is one of the most ancient sports in the world.

Drawings on stones found in Sweden, thought to be of about 4,000 years ago, show skiers in pursuit of a rabbit, though chasing reindeer was necessary rather than sport to these early skiers. Some years ago there were found in a peat bog wooden skis from the Stone Age.

In the Middle Ages ski matches were a favorite form of entertainment in Scandinavia. Then skiing dropped out of fashion until nearly the end of the last century. Today its devotees are numbered by the hundred thousand.

Timing Trick

Important tasks to remember in cutting back and other masts are laid masts which are allowed to freeze on the masts, before the animal has escaped from the interior will not have as pleasant a flavor as they would have if cooled off gradually. Meat craves to take salt when the temperature falls below 26 degrees Fahrenheit. Dry cutting must therefore be carried on in a room the temperature of which does not fall below 26 degrees. Alberta Crop Report.

In sharp comparison with the spring season of 1933, which was unusually late due to the heavy late snowfalls, the spring of 1934 saw work on the land commenced at a comparatively early date, the season being dry and open for the most part. In the southern and eastern districts this year's operations were at work on the land during the first week in April, two weeks earlier than in 1933, and seedling became general in these areas by April 15,
as compared with the first week in May last year. In central and northern Alberta spring work started this year during the week of April 6, and is now fairly general, but seedling will not become general until May 1, and somewhat later in the more northern districts. Seeding in some southern areas is almost 80% completed at this date (April 26).

Surface moisture conditions generally throughout the province are good, but there is comparatively little reserve moisture save in some of the northern districts. In the south, while moisture conditions are better than for some years, very high winds, not met with at periods during the last few weeks, caused drying the land, and in a few areas where strip farming is not yet in practice, soil crusting has been noted.
The central and northern areas have also experienced some high winds, but moisture conditions are very satisfactory in most of these areas, in fact the land in some of the northern localities is still quite wet and spring work commenced later.

There is a definite indication of some decrease in wheat acreage in some districts this spring, but just how extensive this will be it is a little early to ascertain. Coarse grains will be seeded to a greater extent in consequence. Shortage of seed in some districts will tend to a further limitation of wheat acreage, as will also the policy of the Provincial government in providing seed relief only for subnormal areas.

Grasshoppers may appear early in southern areas, and infestation will be serious in certain localities.
The control campaign under direction of the provincial field crops branch is now fully organized, and poison bait distribution will begin at the earliest moment necessary.

Sugar-beet seeding in the irrigated areas in the south is approaching completion under very satisfactory conditions.

Livestock generally speaking is in fairly good condition, following a winter which varied greatly between periods of extreme cold and mild weather. There is a shortage of feed in a number of districts, and a limited amount of assistance in this respect is being given by the provincial government to the needy farmers, as is the case in shortage of seed. Cattle market prices have continued throughout the winter at a very low level, without much indication of improvement. Sheep markets have been going forward steadily to the British market, a total of 3,663 having been shipped from Alberta up to the second week April, compared with 1,931 head in the same period of last year.
Hog prices have been well sustained throughout the winter at good levels, and while there was some decline
this spring, there has been a recovery
during the past week.

We are rejoicing over the fact that a Board of Trade has at last been organized in Didsbury. This should have been done a long time ago, but better late than never.
We hope that the officers will keep in mind that in order to promote trade it is necessary to increase the population of the district, and that the best way to do this is to make the town attractive. Clean streets, good public buildings, beautiful parks, well-kept homes, up-to-date stores—these are some of the things that influence people in their choice of a place to live.

We hope that all residents of the town will observe "Clean-Up Week"
as requested by the Council.

A new sidewalk is badly needed
on the south side of Liesemer Street.

Shouldn't some attention be given to the dust nuisance? The cost of sprinkling the streets or oiling them shouldn't be more than the cost of the damage done to buildings and goods by the dirt—to say nothing of the inconvenience.

One thing that "gets my goat"
(to use modern English) is to have someone come to me uninvited and try to force their opinions upon me.
Especially do I resent it when that some takes advantage of a worthwhile radio broadcast to advise me concerning something that I am not at all interested in. Advertisements in a newspaper are labelled as such and I may read them or not as I wish, but on the radio they are forced so that one cannot turn them out without losing a part of the program. I find myself avoiding otherwise good programs because of the objectionable manner in which the advertising is introduced. I wonder if others do not react in a similar manner? If so, the business men who advertise over the radio would do well to give a little more attention to this matter.

WIFE'S DELIGHT AT HUSBAND'S LOSS

30 Pounds of Fat!

Here is something all wives of fat men will be glad to know. It is the experience of a woman whose husband recently weighed 230 lbs. She writes:

"I really feel I must write and tell you that after taking Krushon pills for nearly 3 months, my husband has got his weight down from 230 lbs. to 206 lbs. This has been achieved by nothing else but Krushon. I am too heavy also, and I started taking Krushon only three weeks ago. Already I have got down from 132 lbs. to 117 lbs. We are delighted!" (Ltrs.)

Krushon combats the cause of fat by assisting the internal organs to perform their functions properly. It shows off each day those waste products and poisons which, if allowed to accumulate, will be converted by the body's chemistry into fatty tissue.

OCCASIONAL WIFE

By EDNA ROBB WEBSTER

Author of "Joretta," "Lipstick Girl" Etc.

SYNOPSIS

Camilla Hoyt and Peter Annon, young and in love, marry secretly, deciding to live their own lives until Peter is able to provide for her. Peter is a young, struggling sculptor trying to win a competition for a scholarship abroad and Camilla is the adopted daughter of a wealthy family. She is not a rich girl when she comes of age and so is attending commercial art in the hope of finding an agency job. Others in the story are Avis Werth, another wealthy girl who is trying to win Peter, Selma Reid, an ex-chambermaid and Gus Matsen, his former roommate with whom he has quarrelled. At a party at an exclusive club Peter entertains Camilla's guests with impersonations. When the rest of the members of the party go to a cabaret to continue the party, Peter and Camilla slip off to the beach by themselves and fall asleep on the sand. When they awake it is early morning and Avis and another boy are standing near them. The makes it necessary for Camilla to announce before the party that she and Peter are married. Brown and Weeks, an advertising agency, where Camilla has submitted her work, send for her and tell her they have a new account which requires unusual treatment of juvenile art. To Camilla's surprise she learns that the account is that of her father's company, which has decided on an extensive campaign to bolster up lagging business. The critics were enthusiastic about her work, and Mr. Weeks offers her a salary of $50.00 a week of start and a prospect of having it doubled. She goes to keep a dinner engagement with Peter. She tells him of her good fortune in securing employment. Mrs. Hoyt is also informed that Camilla has obtained work. She is going to leave the Hoyt household. Avis Werth rents a studio on the same floor as Peter, and invites him to have lunch there. He accepts reluctantly but is favorably impressed with his visit.

(Now Go On With The Story)

CHAPTER XXXVI

In the meantime, Camilla was absorbed with her new work. She lived with, by and for it. She sketched and sketched at the office all day as on the alert for new ideas and characteristics in her public contacts. She visited her Tiny Tots in their amusing exploits while she followed Rose's strict instructions regarding her share of the household tasks, went to sleep with them in her thoughts.

Of course, she thought about Peter, too; the thoughts appeared in connection with the crowding, perceptive ones that demanded most of her attention, much as Peter's thoughts of Camilla trespassed into his working hours.

She saw him occasionally, too, but not as often as formerly. It would not always be like that, they told themselves and each other, with blithe words and wistful hearts. Just now, the paramount issue for each of them was to make a temporary success which would develop a greater future.

Camilla believed that if she made good in the first months of the Wheatheart Cereal campaign, the future would smooth itself out, and days less arduous and anxious, when she might devote much more of herself and her time to Peter. The first terms of their marriage plans had been that nothing should interfere with their individual ambitions. They were very unassuming of each and each adured bravely to them, even though the effort cost them incalculable hours of loneliness and longing.

But, as every plan has its silent advantages, it has its weaknesses also. It never occurred to either of them that the very stimulus of human companionship and relaxation of leisure hours which they were denying themselves in the satisfaction of each other, they were absorbing from others less gratifying.

While Camilla thought that she was conquering her inner impatience, Peter's work by leaving him alone; and he believed that because he could not take care of her, he had no right to expect her to share his meager, anxious existence, had they only been as wise as they believed they were, she would have realized that nothing could have contributed so richly to his inspiration as herself, and he would have known that, loving him as she did, every meager, anxious hour of his life that she did not share was a precious jewel lost and gone, along the way to regret.

The first spark of discord between them appeared on the horizon when she had been working at the office for a month and was gaining confidence in herself rapidly. She had arrived at the studio one Sunday afternoon earlier than Peter had expected her, and found him working on a large color advertisement for a transportation company. Her reactions were due not so much to the fact that he was doing the work, but to her surprise that he had said nothing to her about it and seemed reluctant even then to tell her about it.

He had kissed her rather profusely in greeting and hastened to dispose of his work. Usually, he proceeded with whatever he was doing when she interrupted him.

"Did I disturb you by coming in early?" She was contrite. "I'm sorry. It was such a glorious afternoon and there wasn't anything there to do at the apartment—oh, I am getting to be a very efficient housekeeper and I just couldn't wait longer to see you," she confessed finally.

"That's more like it," Peter laughed, clapping her to him suddenly and looking down into her sleeping eyes, tenderly. "Of course, your coming earlier doesn't disturb me. It does me, though. You are more lovely every time I see you, and that isn't often enough, precious. I was only trying to keep busy as the time would pass more quickly until you came. How's everything?"

"Wonderful, Peter. I'm sure my work is going over big. I just have a hunch it is, because I'm so happy over it, I guess. I am happier every day." Her face glowed with a reflection of her felicity.

As if a chill had suddenly cooled his ardor, Peter's eyes grew somber and a mask of gravity dropped down over his face. His words seemed to Camilla to come suddenly from far away. "The long you see of me, the happier you are." He laughed a little, but it was a mirthless attempt to conceal the bitterness of the jealous male who is helpless to defend himself. Such jealousy is always both unreasoning and unreasonable.

Peter drew away and began to gather up his working materials from the table with swift movements. Camilla wondered frantically if she only imagined the sudden change in his manner. She made a desperate effort to sound casual when she asked, taking off her hat and jacket, "What's this you are doing now?"

"Oh, nothing much," evasively.

"Something new, isn't it?" She approached the table and saw that the huge card was a soft-tone photograph of a his terminal watch Peter had been tinging with water colors. Camilla looked up at him, indignantly.

He flushed slightly and did not meet her eyes. "Oh, you will say it's kindergarten stuff compared with your advertising copy. I wasn't going to show it to you. I'm only doing it for the cash, so I can hold out with my work for the rest of the month."

"Why, of course why shouldn't you do it, if you can spare the time? It looks fine for what it is."

"For what it is," he agreed tonelessly.

"Why, Peter, what's the matter with you?"

"Oh," impatiently, "it tears me to pieces to have to grab life for a little money. It isn't that I mind the extra work. I'd rather dig sewers, for that matter. Only I have to save my dignity by avoiding in the art line if by any contrivance of the imagination anyone could call that art." She knew that his bitter impatience was a culmination of overwork and anxiety. But the effort which she made to soothe his resentment was like touching a match to a fuse.

"Oh, Peter, it's a rotten shame that you have to humiliate your own pride and sacrifice your precious time for the sake of a few paltry dollars, while some people have so much wealth they can't even think up ways to use a fraction of it."

"No use to talk about that. The world's been like that ever since it was started long enough for some to get ahead in the race. Those in the rear are either poor runners or victims of circumstances, one way or another. They're carrying too much weight, got a bad break. Some will catch up in time, some of the leaders get behind, but they can't all come in first, or even second or third."

"I know, but even a thoroughbred needs a fair chance. Too much of the time, the race is fixed."

"Sometimes I feel that way, too, but I'm going to keep up the pace until I reach the tape and find out."

"Of course you will, and you may be the one to break it." She smiled encouragement and stroked his cheek fondly. He had dropped into a chair and pulled her down beside him as they often sat, while they talked.

"But there is so much lack of balance and futile waste of real talent," she continued. "It was just thinking of the time when Mr. Hoyt was at her artist and to know what to give dad for his birthday. Not that she particularly desired to give him anything, but it was one of her pet customs to remember anniversaries with impressive and appropriate gifts. He had everything more than he needed. But she finally hit upon the idea of a gold keychain."

"I went with her to the jeweler's when she bought it, and remember that I thought it was silly to pay so much for a thing that looked no better than the average metal keychain, though it cost me twenty dollars. It cost a hundred dollars, but that was only the beginning of the idea. She had his keys copied in solid gold to go with it and each of them engraved with his monogram. I believe the whole thing cost the trifling sum of five or six hundred dollars."

"Did he like it?" asked Camilla.

"He had to seem appreciative. But I'll bet he never used his keys again without thinking how many boxes of Wheatheart Cereal profit long represented."

"Well, you have to consider that from another viewpoint, too," he conceded. "I'll bet that jeweler and the locksmith who made the keys, and the metallurgists and all the workers involved on down the line were thankful for her extravagant whim. Maybe there was even a poor, struggling sculptor somewhere along the line who profited a little by the transaction, indirectly. That's what wealth is for, to keep the ball rolling along so everyone can have a go at it. That's what money does the trouble is now. Too many people have stopped playing the game and are waiting for the other fellow to begin while they watch from the sidelines."

"I'm glad you gave me the idea that the gold keychain might have done someone good, after all. I never thought of it that way."

"Sure like the fellow down the street here who runs the little flower shop. He was telling me yesterday that he used to count big on orders for the patients in the hospital across the park, but lots of those orders are killed now because someone got the idea that flowers were an extravagant luxury in the depression. They think they are being noble in refusing to accept flowers and have the money added to charity funds. Clubs, societies and individuals are taking it up. And where does that get you? More charity for the shiftless and less work for people who want to make an honest living? Funny how middle yellow the leader blindly, like sheep."

"No matter what kind of a silly idea jumps over the fence, a whole flock follows."

"But don't you think that's rather sweet to know that the money which might have bought flowers for you that you don't need, is feeding some poor child?"

"No, I don't. Look here, what good does that do if the kid's father had been driving a truck for a florist and lost his job because everybody got buying flowers? Not only the driver is involved, either. There's the florist and his employees, the growers and their gardeners, the resellers, the flower box manufacturers, it's endless. Suppose I worked in a flower shop or a greenhouse to get by while I'm studying. I've done almost everything. It's all the same principle."

Camilla mused. "Why, that's right. I never thought of it that way before. No wonder the world gets mixed up every so often. It's an awful tangle, isn't it?"

"It's a million tangles all snarled up."

So far, the discussion had been impersonal enough, but it was Camilla's next remark that caused the spark.

Prince Weds Commoner

Grandson Of Swedish King Gives Up Royal Rights

A romance like a fairy tale of fiction came true with the wedding of Sigvard, Prince of Sweden, Duke of Uppland, and grandson of the Swedish king, to the beautiful Franca Fatzek, 22-year-old daughter of a Berlin industrialist.

The 26-year-old prince, like Lenart, his cousin, abandoned his princely rights for a romantic union with the German actress.

They were married in the large council chamber of Caxton hall, instead of in the small registry office, despite the fact a municipal election was being held in the building.

Mountain View Notes

We are very sorry to hear of Mrs. H. Atkinson's illness, and wish her a speedy recovery. We shall be ready to welcome her amongst us again with her ever cheery smile.

Mountain View W.I. met at the home of Mrs. W. P. Schultz on Thursday afternoon last. Owing to the illness of Mrs. H. Atkinson the chair was taken by the vice-president Mrs. Harry Pearson. The paper on "Legislation" was held over on account of the absence of the member who was to have given same. After a short business session a musical afternoon was enjoyed. The May meeting will be held in Community Hall.

To the memory of the original 10th Battalion, very few of whom remain, who took part in the Battle of St. Julien on April 22nd, 1915:

Nineteen years ago today Several noble men their part did play.

In the Battle of St. Julien many fell, Only a few came out the story to tell.

Colonel Boyle their leader did fall So shortly after his country's call, Mayor Lee Redman the lead did take When the Noble 10th their charge did make.

Many a home in this land became sad, As the casualty list was so very bad, The killed and wounded, the "missing" lists Filled thousands of eyes with teary mists.

At this time several remember those Who to save our Empire this course chose— And today we still can trace Those who fought in this fierce battle and race.
